Executive Summary

Developing a successful food donation and food scraps recycling program in New York State is a multifaceted effort. The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) uses a combination of tools, including legislation, regulation, funding, research, technical assistance, and public engagement, to develop a program that maximizes food donation and food scraps recycling around the state.

The Passage of the Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law (Law) in 2019 marked a major milestone in DEC's efforts to enhance food donation and increase capture of food scraps for recycling. The Law, which took effect on January 1, 2022, requires large businesses and institutions that generate an annual average of two tons or more of wasted food per week to donate edible food to the maximum extent practicable and to recycle remaining food scraps when there is an organics recycling facility with capacity within 25 miles. To ensure the required source separated food scraps are recycled, the Law also prohibits transporters, transfer facilities, and disposal facilities from sending or accepting food scraps for disposal. To assist with implementation of the Law, DEC promulgated the 6 NYCRR Part 350 (Part 350) regulations.

For 2022, DEC identified 1,150 businesses and institutions required to comply with the Law. All of these entities were required to donate excess edible food, and 320 (28%) were required to recycle their food scraps. By October 2022, 1.6 million pounds of food had already been donated to New Yorkers under this Law.

For 2023, DEC has identified 1,198 businesses and institutions required to comply with the Law. All of these entities are required to donate excess edible food, and 445 (37%) will be required to recycle.

DEC implemented multiple grant programs to spur growth in both the food donation and organics recycling sectors. For food donation efforts, DEC provided $4.8 million to Feeding New York State (Feeding NYS) and the 10 regional food banks, and $1.6 million directly to emergency food relief organizations. DEC also provided $5.3 million to municipalities for wasted food reduction, food donation, and food scraps recycling programs.

DEC contracted with three critical partners to provide technical assistance to food scraps generators, recyclers, and others—Feeding NYS, the New York State Pollution Prevention Institute (P2I), and the Center for EcoTechnology (CET). These entities provide a wealth of knowledge and experience in food donation and food scraps recycling.

Research supports the development of new technologies and techniques for recycling organics. DEC funded seven distinct research projects at SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry (SUNY ESF) and Cornell University. Stakeholder engagement was vital to the successful implementation of the Law. DEC established a Food Donation Working Group to advise DEC on donation issues and opportunities. DEC held meetings with other states and cities with similar laws. At each stage of implementing the Law, DEC met with stakeholders to hear their concerns and answer questions directly, through a variety of platforms, including informational webinars, presentations and a listserv for disseminating information.

New York State's food donation and food scraps recycling program is off to a strong start. DEC strives to improve the program and continually see more food donated and food scraps recycled. Recognizing that potent greenhouse gases are generated by organic waste disposed in landfills, one key recommendation outlined in the Scoping Plan¹ under the Climate Leadership and Community Protection Act (CLCPA) is the amendment to the Law to include additional businesses and institutions by lowering the minimum food scraps generation requirement and eliminating the 25-mile requirement.

I. Introduction to the Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law

Up to 40% of the food produced in the United States goes uneaten. Meanwhile, an estimated 1.9 million New Yorkers are food insecure. Most excess edible food and food scraps end up in a landfill, where their decomposition produces methane, a potent greenhouse gas. When food is thrown away, it's not just the food that is wasted, but also the resources that went into growing, harvesting, and transporting that food. With these factors in mind, it is important to make the most of the food produced by redirecting wholesome edible food to those in need and diverting food scraps to organics recycling facilities where they will be recycled into nutrient-rich soil amendments. In 2019, New York State passed the Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law.² Under the Law, effective January 1, 2022, large generators of food scraps (defined as generating an annual average of two tons per week or more) must donate edible food and recycle all remaining food scraps when located within 25 miles of a viable organics recycler. These generators are known as designated food scraps generators (DSFGs). Examples of potential DSFGs include grocery stores, full-service restaurants, and supercenters. The Law excludes New York City (as the City already adopted an applicable local law³) and specific institutions, including hospitals, nursing homes, adult care facilities, and K–12 schools. The Law also includes requirements for transporters, transfer facilities, combustion facilities, and landfills to ensure the separated food scraps arrive at recycling facilities and prohibit disposal of source separated organics. Additionally, the Law specifies that DEC shall:

- Develop and publish a methodology to determine which businesses fall under the Law;
- Establish a waiver process;
- Create outreach and education materials to achieve compliance with the Law,
- Assess the organics recycling facility capacity across the state; and
- Provide lists of all DSFGs, organics recyclers, and waste transporters that manage source separated organics.

Food Donation in New York State

Foodlink is one of New York's 10 regional food banks and serves as the hub of the emergency food system across a 10-county service area.

New York State has a thriving and complex food donation landscape. There are many diverse local and regional organizations collaborating to rescue food that would otherwise be wasted. This network includes 10 regional food banks that are assisted by Feeding NYS and approximately 3,000 local emergency food relief organizations. There are 1.9 million New York State residents who depend on the charitable food system, most of whom are employed, but do not make enough money to sustain themselves.

New York State retailers, wholesalers, farmers, distribution centers, and educational institutions all donate food. In New York State, farmers alone donate more than 30 million pounds of fresh produce each year. The Law plays a critical role in introducing additional wholesome, edible food to the food donation network in New York from businesses and institutions that are now required to do so. The food donation system is not without its challenges, as improvements to educational outreach, transportation, and storage are crucial to capturing more food for donation. Ultimately, when excess food is available, the network of food banks and emergency food relief organizations need to be able to collect and distribute it. Some donors expressed concerns with liability and logistics as potential barriers to beginning or expanding their donation programs. Educating food donors and enhancing efficient collection and distribution infrastructure is a constant process requiring ongoing investment and communication.

Food Scraps Recycling in New York State

Across the state, food scraps are managed in a variety of ways, ranging from backyard composting to food scraps drop-off programs to large-scale composting and anaerobic digestion facilities. Food scraps from entities covered by the Law are managed by organics recycling facilities regulated by DEC. Under the Law, organics recycling includes animal feed, composting, anaerobic digestion, direct land application, and other methods approved by DEC. There are currently 60 regulated composting facilities and 5 regional anaerobic digesters that accept food scraps. Approximately half of these composting facilities and all five regional anaerobic digesters have expressed interest in accepting food scraps from businesses and institutions required to comply with the Law.

Organics Diversion Requirements beyond New York State

Massachusetts, Vermont, Connecticut, New Jersey, Rhode Island, California, Oregon, Washington, and several cities have implemented food donation and organics diversion programs. While, each law or regulation each law or regulation adopted in other locations shares the same goal: to divert organics from disposal, there are several differences between them. Specific differences include:

- The threshold of the amount of organic waste that requires generators to participate in the program;
- A donation requirement;
- The inclusion of predefined schedules for lowering the required amount of food generation to be considered a DFSG;
- Established waiver requirements; and
- The applicability of mileage distances from recycling facilities.

Within New York State, New York City and Ulster County implemented their own local food donation and food scraps recycling laws. Beginning in 2016, New York City implemented an organics diversion mandate⁴ and determined which generators would be regulated, primarily based on the size of the building. They phased in different types of establishments after a required annual assessment by the Department of Sanitation of the City of New York. In 2019, Ulster County enacted the Food Waste Prevention and Recovery Act⁵, which requires the diversion of organics, reduced incrementally, from generators of 2 tons per week starting in 2021 to 0.5 ton per week by July 1, 2023.

Part 350 Regulations

The Law outlines various DEC responsibilities, including promulgating regulations on certain specific issues as well as additional regulations necessary to implement the provisions of the Law. The Law gives specific responsibilities for involved entities beyond food scraps generators, such as waste transporters, transfer facilities, and solid waste disposal facilities (i.e., landfills and combustors). The Food Donation and Food Scrap Recycling Law regulations are separate from the 6 NYCRR Part 360 series rules, which are limited to addressing human health and environmental impacts relating to the operation of solid waste management facilities (including organics recycling facilities) and the transportation of waste.

Part 350 outlines the responsibilities of the DFSGs, including requirements for the separation of materials at the source, and ensuring excess edible food is donated and food scraps are recycled at an organics recycling facility. The regulations also include requirements for other involved facilities, including transporters, combustion facilities, and landfills. These facilities are required to ensure the separated food scraps arrive at recycling facilities.

6 NYCRR Part 350⁶ Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling regulations (Part 350) were adopted on August 11, 2021, under Title 22 of Article 27 of the Environmental Conservation Law and are broken down into four Subparts:

- Subpart 350-1 provides the general provisions that apply to the rulemaking, including purpose, exemptions, prohibitions, definitions, inspection, and severability.
- Subpart 350-2 outlines the requirements that apply to DFSGs. Subpart 350-2 outlines how DFSGs are determined and the requirements for those generators. The requirements include donating excess food, delivery of food scraps to an organics recycling facility with capacity, and annual reporting. Subpart 350-2 also includes a temporary waiver provision for generators that can demonstrate a need to be excluded from the requirements of the Law.
- Subpart 350-3 clarifies that the lists of generators, organic recyclers, and transporters will be maintained by DEC.

- Subpart 350-4 outlines the requirements that apply to transporters, organic recyclers, transfer facilities, landfills, and combustion facilities. These requirements mandate that once food scraps are separated by DFSGs, they must ultimately be recycled and not disposed.

Connection to the CLCPA

Reducing methane, a potent greenhouse gas, is a top New York State Climate Leadership and Community Protection Act⁷ priority. Sustainable organics management is central to reducing the climate footprint of materials management. The CLCPA's Scoping Plan⁸ takes a comprehensive look at all aspects of the state's activities and how they impact climate change. Within the waste sector, the Scoping Plan acknowledges that methane leaking from landfills is the largest contributor of harmful emissions. Removing organics, such as food scraps, from landfills is one of the primary means to reduce those emissions. DEC's efforts to increase food donation and food scraps recycling align with the State's climate goals.

Potential Improvements to the Law

The current Law limits mandatory participation to the largest commercial food scraps generators within a very small mileage range from an organics recycling facility (25 miles). Food scraps account for approximately 17% of the municipal solid waste stream and are a significant contributor to greenhouse gas emissions when landfilled. The Scoping Plan recommends amending the Law to include smaller food scraps generators and eliminating the mileage range from organics recycling facilities.

The mileage range simply does not reflect how waste is managed in New York State. The average distance waste is currently transported is nearly 60 miles and will only increase as current disposal capacity decreases. Additionally, the Law and the Part 350 regulations include a waiver provision. If the cost of recycling is prohibitive, regardless of the location of the recycling facility, a waiver can be granted.

II. Implementation of the Law

The New York State Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law became effective on January 1, 2022. DEC completed the following actions to comply with and implement the Law:

- Develop a list of entities subject to the Law;
- Determine which generators must recycle, in addition to the donation requirement;
- Perform outreach and education efforts; and
- Develop a waiver program.

The implementation of the program in the first year was successful and DEC continues to explore ways to improve the program.

Development of the DFSG List

The Law requires DEC to publish a list of all DFSGs and to annually assess the capacity of each organic recycler and notify DFSGs if they are required to recycle. All DFSGs are required to donate.

Identifying Food Scraps Generator Sectors

There are a wide range of business sectors in New York State. DEC analyzed various business sectors and identified the ones likely to generate large amounts of food scraps. In addition, DEC also evaluated the generator sectors used in other states and cities with food scraps recycling laws or mandates in place. For businesses, the NAICS (North American Industry Classification System) or SIC (Standard Industrial Classification) codes were used to group similar operations. For non-businesses, such as colleges and correctional facilities, publicly available information was used. Based on this information, DEC categorized the food scraps generators into the following sectors:

- Colleges and Universities
- Correctional Facilities and Jails
- Grocery and Specialty Food
- Hospitality
- Restaurants
- Supercenters

- Other Generators
 - Amusement and Theme Parks
 - Casinos and Racetracks
 - Food Wholesale and Distribution
 - Malls
 - Military Bases
 - Sporting Venues

The Law specifically exempts some sectors, including K–12 schools, hospitals, nursing homes, adult care facilities, and generators in New York City. Therefore, those sectors were not further evaluated.

Choosing Food Scraps Generation Factors

Site-specific information on food scraps generated from all sources is not readily available, or in many cases, even known by the generator. Therefore, to produce a list of DFSGs, DEC used factors that approximate the food scraps generated based on other known information, such as the number of employees, students, etc. The Pollution Prevention Institute (P2I) at Rochester Institute of Technology conducted research for DEC to develop a methodology for estimating food waste generation rates for the sectors subject to the Law. To determine the best factor to use for each sector, P2I reviewed academic literature, government-funded reports, and other information available.

View the complete summary of the analysis performed by P2I.⁹

Based on P2I's recommendations, DEC used the food scraps generation factors outlined in Table 1.

Other types of food service generators (e.g., malls, sporting venues) provided a unique challenge. There are data sources providing food scraps generation for some of these generators, but the variability is significant because the generators can vary widely in operations.

Table 1: Food Scraps Generation Factors by Sector

Food Scraps Generation Factors by Sector
Sector	Food Scraps Generation Factor	Number Needed for a Generation Rate of 2 Tons Per Week
Colleges and Universities
1) Residential	142 lbs./student/year	1,465 students
2) Non-residential	38 lbs./student/year	5,474 students
Correctional Facilities & Jails
a. County Jails	1 lb./inmate/day	570 inmates
b. State Facilities	0.65 lb./inmate/day	877 inmates
Grocery and Specialty Food	3,000 lbs./employee/year	69 employees
Hospitality	1,983 lbs./employee/year	105 employees
Restaurants
a. Full Service	3,000 lbs./employee/year	69 employees
b. Limited Service	2,200 lbs./employee/year	94 employees
Supercenters	1,000 lbs./employee/year	208 employees

Food Wholesale and Food Distribution

P2I identified a food scraps generation factor for this sector based on the number of employees. DEC determined that more research is needed for this sector to obtain more accurate data, especially with respect to the proportion of material that would need to be depackaged prior to being recycled.

Amusement and Theme Parks

Many of these facilities have hotels and/or large restaurants on premises for which there are established food scraps generation factors that were used to determine DFSG status.

Casinos and Racetracks

Many of these facilities have hotels and/or large restaurants on premises for which there are established food scraps generation factors. In those instances, that data informed the analysis to calculate whether the facility would qualify as a DFSG.

Convention Centers and Trade Shows

When available, seating capacity and the number of annual visitors and number of employees were considered along with food scraps generation factors identified by P2I. Data was not consistent across the sector. There is variability due to the number of events that occur at each facility and the amount and types of food available.

Military Bases

DEC contacted the U.S. Army Fort Drum facility to assess food scraps generation at military bases statewide. Based on the number of personnel and types of activities at this facility compared to other military installations in the state, DEC determined that other installations would generate well below the DFSG threshold.

Malls

DEC determined malls to be DFSGs when they had a significant restaurant presence, whether that is stand-alone restaurants or larger, established food courts.

Sporting Venues

DEC identified DFSGs in this sector using a publicly available factor for pounds per seat. There is variability due to the number of events that occur at each facility and the amount and types of food available.

Food Processors

Due to the highly variable and proprietary nature of these operations (e.g., size, type of food processed, nature of the waste—liquids versus solids), there are no factors that readily indicate how much food scraps are produced. Much of this waste is already recycled through animal feed, land application, and other means. DEC is working with Cornell University to assist food processors and farmers on methods to recycle food processing residuals.

DEC will continue to seek additional data sources to refine estimates for food scraps generation for these other food service operations. This data will become more refined in subsequent years as DEC gathers more information on waste generation from various types of generators.

DEC understands there may be additional sectors not captured in this analysis due to the lack of available data. DEC will continue to reassess available data on an annual basis.

Determining DFSGs

In order to determine the DFSGs, DEC needed a database of generators in each sector, including the characteristics of those generators (e.g., address, type, number of employees/students/inmates). P2I researched available public and private databases available for this purpose. D&B Hoovers (Hoovers) was selected as the database available that could be used to identify businesses that were DFSGs. P2I obtained the database from Hoovers and used other publicly available data (e.g., college student population data) to produce an initial database of DFSGs and other generators for review by DEC.

DEC reviewed the preliminary list of DFSGs provided by P2I. Although the underlying database, Hoovers, is useful for many analyses of businesses, a review of each individual generator identified a number of errors that needed to be rectified. DEC spent significant time “cleansing” the data set, removing duplicates, aligning generators in the correct sectors, removing generators that are no longer in operation, etc. In most cases, this required a web search of each generator listed, and in some cases, contacting the generators directly. This resulted in the final DFSG list published on June 1, 2021. The same process was used again in 2022.

Striving for Better Data about Generators

DEC will continue to refine the food scraps generation estimates based on new and revised data sources. Data continues to improve as other states and municipalities implement food scraps recycling laws and mandates, and revise food scraps generation estimates based on data collected. In addition, feedback from generators and data from annual reports submitted by DFSGs will help guide updates to the factors used to estimate food scraps generation from the various sectors.

Determination of DFSGs That Are Required to Recycle

All DFSGs are required to donate excess edible food to the maximum extent practicable. However, only those DFSGs that are within 25 miles of an organics recycling facility with sufficient capacity are required to recycle their food scraps. The DFSG is not obligated to use the recycler within that 25-mile radius; it is only the trigger for the obligation to recycle.

To determine which DFSGs were required to recycle, DEC developed a list of all known food scraps organic recycling facilities in New York State and in states that are within 25 miles of the New York State border. Based on the 2021 organics recycling facility annual reports, facilities indicated if they were interested in accepting food scraps from DFSGs and their available or excess capacity. For each interested facility, DEC additionally evaluated both the approved regulated capacity for the facility and the amount of food scraps that were currently being processed. This resulted in a list of food scraps recycling facilities and their available capacity.

P2I provided a listing of all DFSGs and what food scraps recycling facilities, if any, were located within a 25-mile radius of the generator. DEC determined which DFSGs would be required to recycle by excluding generators that were already known to be recycling and determining which generators could utilize the available capacity at the recyclers within 25 miles. Those that are required to both donate and recycle are indicated on the list published on June 1, 2021, and updated in 2022.

Summary of 2022 and 2023 DFSG Lists

The 2022 and 2023 DFSG lists with name, type, address, and requirements (donation or donation and recycling) can be found on the Law webpage¹⁰ and also in Appendix A.

A summary of the number of DFSGs in each sector effective for 2022 and 2023 (published in 2021 and 2022), with the number required to donate and recycle, is found in Table 2.

The total number of DFSGs did not change significantly between 2022 and 2023. The largest increase was seen in the grocery and specialty food sector, increasing from 350 to 468. This does not represent the construction of new or expanded stores; it reflects new reporting methods presented in Hoovers. The number of DFSGs in the wholesale and distribution sector dropped from 270 in 2022 to 126 in 2023. As mentioned earlier, some food scraps generators are difficult to assess. Many wholesale and distribution facilities were removed after obtaining additional data about their operations that demonstrated they produce well below the two ton per week threshold.

As outlined in Table 2, all DFSGs are required to donate excess edible food to the maximum extent practicable. For 2023, approximately 28% of the DFSGs are required to recycle food scraps based on the 25-mile analysis. One of the goals of the Law is to expand organics recycling capacity in New York State. The number of recycling facilities is expected to increase as additional DFSGs and other generators begin to separate food scraps from the rest of the waste stream to facilitate recycling. It will take time to get this new and expanded infrastructure in place.

Outreach and Education Efforts Required by the Law

DEC launched a comprehensive outreach and education program to fulfill and go beyond the goals of the Law. The Law requires DEC to develop and make available educational materials to assist DFSGs with compliance. The Law also requires DEC to develop educational materials on food waste minimization and encourage municipalities to disseminate these materials and include them on their municipal websites. Beyond the requirements of the Law, DEC expanded the outreach program by contracting with entities with expertise in food donation and recycling to provide free assistance, as well as DEC-sponsored webinars, newsletters, social media posts, and guidance publications. These additional efforts are described in more detail in Section III, and samples of DEC-sponsored educational materials are found in Appendix B.

Approved Waiver Requests

Under Part 350, a DFSG may request a temporary waiver from some or all requirements. Section 350-2.6 outlines the details for the waiver requirements. A waiver petition must include evidence of one or more of the following justifications:

- Less than two tons of food scraps generated every week: Even though the generator is listed as a DFSG by DEC, the DFSG does not produce two tons (on a wet weight basis) or more of food scraps per week, based on an annual average. Increased food donation cannot be used to reduce the calculation of food scraps produced by the generator for purposes of this justification;
- Total cost of solid waste management is 10% more: If the total solid waste management costs, including organics recycling, is at least 10% greater than the total cost of disposal without organics recycling;
- No available facility within 25 miles: Any organics recycling facility or intermediary facility within 25 miles (measured in a straight line), as identified by DEC, does not have available capacity;
- Food scraps transporter is not available: A food scraps transporter is not available to the DFSG; or
- Other: Circumstances unique to the DFSG.

If approved, the waiver will be valid from January 1 through December 31 of the following calendar year.

Of the 1,150 DFSGs identified in June 2021, 28 (approximately 2%) received a waiver for the 2022 calendar year. Table 3 shows the number of waivers issued for each sector. Waiver requests for 2023 are still under review by DEC.

Table 3: Waivers Issued for Each Sector in 2022

DFSG Waivers Issued for 2022
Sector	Number of Establishments	Waivers Issued
Colleges & Universities	76	2
Correctional Facilities & Jails	31	1
Grocery & Specialty Food	350	13
Hospitality	71	0
Restaurants (Catering, Limited & Full Service)	203	12
Supercenters	76	0
Amusement & Theme Parks	10	0
Casinos & Racetracks	11	0
Malls	31	0
Military Bases	1	0
Sporting Venues	3	0
Wholesale & Distribution	270	0
Total	1,150	28

Of the 28 waivers issued for 2022, the vast majority (25) were issued based on cost. As outlined above, a waiver is justified if the total cost, including organics recycling, is at least 10% greater than the total cost without organics recycling. Cost includes the fee for transport, which can be prohibitive in some areas. As more food scraps generators recycle, these costs should lessen. Of the 25 waivers for cost, 13 were issued to grocery stores and 12 to restaurants.

Food Donated and Food Scraps Recycled under the Law in 2022

The first annual report from the DFSGs is due on March 1, 2023. The data from the annual reports, in addition to data from Feeding NYS, will be used to estimate donation and recycling efforts under the Law and will be provided in future DEC annual reports. It is expected that food donation will see the greatest increase in the early years of implementation of the Law since the infrastructure for the management of donated items is well established. It may take longer for food scraps recycling facilities to develop or expand.

DFSG Annual Reporting

Under Part 350, all DFSGs must submit an annual report¹¹ to DEC each year, beginning on March 1, 2023.

The annual report must include, at a minimum, the following information:

- The amount of edible food donated and name(s) of the food relief organization(s);
- The amount of food scraps recycled;
- The name of the transporter used for food scraps;
- The name of the organics recycler(s), intermediary facility, or a description of the on-site treatment system where the food scraps were processed; and
- A description of any implementation issues (e.g., contamination in food scraps, inconsistent pickups, odors) and actions taken to address those issues.

DEC will use the data from the DFSG annual reports for compliance purposes, to track the progress of food donation and food scraps recycling efforts, and to determine where to best target State outreach, education, and funding initiatives. This data will be highlighted in future reports.

Part 350 Inspections and Enforcement

The Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law is found in Title 22 of Article 27 of the Environmental Conservation Law (ECL). The primary ECL civil enforcement provisions in Article 71 that apply to this law are found in 71-4003. DEC has the authority to inspect facilities and to impose penalties.

DEC has a variety of tools available related to enforcement, including, but not limited to:

- Direct verbal instruction and guidance by telephone or email;
- Personal site visits and verbal instruction and guidance;
- A letter providing instruction and guidance;
- Directives to regulated entities;
- A letter providing a warning along with instruction and guidance

To assist DFSGs and others subject to the Law, DEC has contracted with Feeding NYS and CET to provide free guidance and technical assistance on food donation and recycling. More information on these assistance programs can be found in Section III.

DEC enforcement is related to the provisions of the Law and does not include or affect food safety requirements, inspections, or enforcement. Food safety continues to be under the jurisdiction of the New York State Department of Health (DOH) and Department of Agriculture and Markets (DAM), and other involved State and federal agencies.

III. Additional Efforts to Enhance Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling in New York State

A successful food donation and food scraps recycling program requires a comprehensive, consistent, and multifaceted approach. The Law is a critical component, but funding, research, and outreach and education are needed as well. DEC has developed a comprehensive program to include all the components which are summarized in this Section.

Funding for Critical Partnerships

To support efforts under the Law, DEC has partnered with Feeding NYS and CET to provide technical assistance to businesses, institutions, municipalities, organics recyclers, and others. The assistance is available to those subject to the Law as well as other entities interested in food donation and organics recycling. DEC also has a long-standing partnership with P21 to evaluate and promote pollution prevention efforts, including food diversion and food scraps recycling assistance and research.

CET and Rethink Food Waste NY

With $1 million in funding from DEC that started in summer 2022, CET administers the Rethink Food Waste NY program¹² and provides technical assistance for businesses and organizations interested in sustainably managing excess food and food scraps. CET offers site-specific, targeted technical assistance to improve existing food scraps recycling programs or to start a food waste reduction and recycling program through hotline, virtual, or on-site assistance to DFSGs, as well as small and exempt generators. Along with its partner organizations, CET additionally supports and helps improve the food waste diversion marketplace through assistance to organics recyclers, transporters, transfer facilities, and others, to ensure the long-term success of food donation and food scraps recycling programs by increasing processing capacity and organics recycling marketplace expansion.

Feeding NYS

DEC has provided $4.8 million to assist the food donation network in New York State through Feeding NYS, formerly known as the Food Bank Association of New York State. The funding has covered a variety of items, including:

- Food donation technical assistance¹³ for businesses that are required to comply with the Law;
- Drivers' salaries, vehicle expenses, and cooling and transportation equipment;
- Assistance with COVID-19 relief, specifically with the movement of dairy and produce from New York State farmers to food banks; and
- Staffing and outreach and education needs at the 10 regional food banks.

Feeding NYS has been highly successful in obtaining new sources of food donation. In less than a year, more than 1.6 million pounds of food has been donated through Feeding NYS's efforts.

¹³ <https://feedingnys.org/food-donation-and-food-scraps-recycling-law/>

P2I

DEC has collaborated with P2I to provide technical assistance and practical, cost-effective solutions to businesses, municipalities, and community organizations for diverting, preventing, and managing wasted food and food scraps.

This funding has allowed P2I to create their Food Waste Diversion program¹⁴, which serves as an online clearinghouse of resources for businesses and municipalities on how they can best manage their wasted food and food scraps via reduction, donation, and organics recycling practices. P2I has developed several tools, including a food waste estimator calculator, food waste self-assessment tool kits, and an online map (Organics Resource Locator¹⁵) that shows food waste generators, organics recycling facilities, and other relevant entities.

In addition to DEC's funding, Empire State Development has provided $4 million to fund the Food Waste Reduction and Diversion Reimbursement Program¹⁶ that is managed by P2I. The program provides reimbursement to New York State businesses or not-for-profits that generate, transport, or recycle more than one ton of food waste per week.

Funding for Emergency Food Relief Organizations

In addition to providing funding to Feeding NYS, DEC has provided grants directly to local emergency food relief organizations:

- DEC awarded $1.1 million to 84 local emergency food relief organizations to increase the amount of wholesome food available through donation to those in need and improve the efficiency of food rescue operations.
- DEC is currently administering a $500,000 grant program to specifically address the need for additional refrigerated storage and transportation of fresh foods. This funding can be used to purchase:
 - Trucks, refrigerated vehicles, and related equipment (trailers, insulated food storage containers, etc.) used in the transport of food, and

- cooling equipment (freezers, refrigerators, a walk-in freezer or cold room, etc.) and related installation costs (electrical, delivery, etc.).

Funding provided by DEC to the Church of the Holy Apostles was used to purchase shelving, storage bins, and backpacks, and paid for staff time of the volunteer manager and their pantry coordinator. During December 2020, they were able to distribute 39,000 meals per week in comparison to 840 meals per week on average in 2019.

Supporting Municipalities

DEC has a long history of promoting organics recycling by providing funding opportunities. The Municipal Waste Reduction and Recycling (MWRR) grant program was established to fund municipal recycling efforts long before food scraps recycling was a focus. However, DEC has always recognized organic recycling as a recycling method to be supported under the MWRR grant program. The program funds items associated with organics management, such as facility enhancements, food scrap collection bins, assorted machinery, and specialized trucks. It is typical for this program to have a waiting list.

Beginning in 2017, DEC utilized dedicated funding in the State budget for food donation and food scraps recycling. DEC applied these funds to support municipal food donation and food scraps recycling in a more efficient and targeted way. This funding supports the following DEC grant programs:

- $2 million to assist municipalities with the establishment or expansion of municipal food scraps recycling programs. Priority is given to eligible projects serving Potential Environmental Justice Areas and Disadvantaged Communities. This is a new, one-time grant program offered by DEC in 2022; and
- $3.3 million to assist municipalities with wasted food reduction, food donation, and food scraps recycling programs. This funding supported 27 municipal projects.

Funding for organics management-related projects has also been distributed through DEC's Climate Smart Communities Grant program.

In addition to DEC efforts, municipalities are significant partners in providing information about the Law to affected entities and building food scraps recycling infrastructure opportunities for the public and local businesses.

Under the Law, DEC is required to develop educational materials on food waste minimization and work with municipalities to share this information. DEC has published the following resources:

- Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law: Guidance for NYS Businesses¹⁷;
- Reducing Wasted Food at Home¹⁸ (developed in partnership with P2I);

- Municipality Planning Guide: Food Waste Management in Your Community¹⁹ (developed in partnership with P2I); and
- Toolkit for Building a Municipal Food Waste Strategy²⁰ (developed in partnership with P2I).

Growth of the Food Scraps Recycling Industry

Both DEC and P2I provide funding and technical assistance for food scraps recycling facilities, and to CET (through the Rethink Food Waste NY initiative) to provide technical assistance. Creating organics recycling infrastructure, even with additional funding, is challenging. Concerns such as facility siting, securing sufficient organic materials for processing, the cost for collection and transport of waste, managing contamination, competing with disposal facilities, product marketing, and other issues are significant.

Ideally, the food scraps recycling infrastructure in the state would be sufficient to recycle all the food scraps generated, from the largest businesses and institutions down to the residential level. Given the challenges, it will take time and effort to see this full infrastructure come to fruition. It is likely to be a combination of ownership styles (municipal, private, and public-private partnerships), facility types (animal feed, composting, anaerobic digestion, etc.), and sizes (backyard composting to large regional facilities).

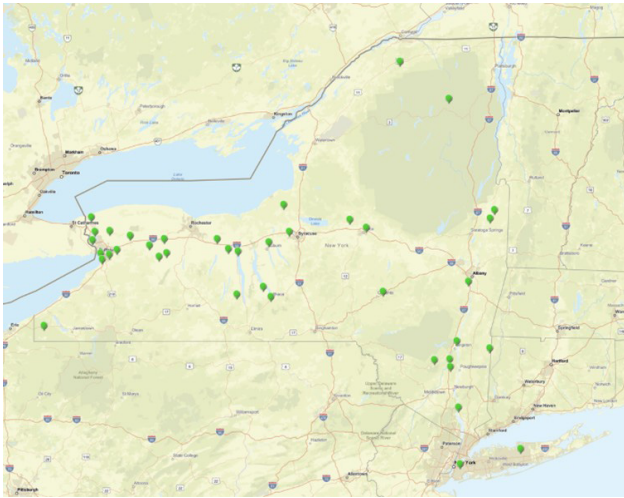

There is growth in the number of organic recycling facilities for food scraps. When the list of food scraps recyclers interested in accepting food scraps from entities required to comply with the Law was first published June 1, 2021, there were 27 (26 in State and 1 out of state) food scraps recycling facilities. As of November 2022, the list has grown to 48 (39 in State and 9 out of state), adding approximately 260 extra tons of capacity per week. From 2019, when the Law was passed, to 2022, eight new composting facilities started operation. Although the increasing numbers are encouraging, the capacity increase is not as significant. The investment needed for larger facilities is substantial and it will take time for those facilities to develop.

Funding for Academic Research

Research is an important component of a successful program involving food management. DEC provided significant support to research efforts related to organics management. These projects include:

- $1.5 million to SUNY ESF to identify new methods to manage non-recyclable fibrous materials via composting. This is part of a larger $5.7-million partnership with SUNY ESF, which helped establish the New York State Center for Sustainable Materials Management and invigorate the state's recycling industry.
- $1,481,000 in funding to Cornell University to research the following:
 - $776,000 - Innovative ways to utilize acid whey from Greek yogurt;
 - $85,000 - Livestock mortality management and capacity in New York State and sustainable disposal methods for livestock;
 - $200,000 - Impacts of the Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law on farms and food processors;
 - $100,000 - Use of food scraps for animal feed;
 - $120,000 - Guidance and assistance to farms with anaerobic digesters on how to incorporate food scraps and food processing waste into their operations; and
 - $200,000 - Increased use of compost on farms and for erosion control.

To date, DEC has provided almost $3 million to support research on the advancement of organics recycling in New York State. These efforts are an important component of the long-term success of these recycling efforts in the state.

Stakeholder Engagement and Outreach and Education

DEC has been working on bringing specialized attention to the diversion of organic materials, especially wasted food and food scraps, since 2015. While the Law didn't take effect until 2022, DEC began efforts when the Law passed in 2019, to prepare New York State businesses, communities, and State agencies for the upcoming requirements.

Stakeholder Engagement

Discussions with States and Cities with Organics Diversion Programs

DEC met with other states and cities that had existing organics diversion laws and mandates to learn about their programs and their lessons learned. This included discussions with the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection, Connecticut Department of Energy and Environmental Protection, Vermont Agency of Natural Resources, the Department of Sanitation of the City of New York, and the City of Vancouver.

Stakeholder Meetings

DEC hosted five in-person stakeholder meetings targeting businesses and institutions, food banks, food rescue organizations, waste transporters, organics recyclers, municipalities, and environmental organizations.

Food Donation Working Group

DEC engaged with a number of stakeholders within the food donation network to learn more about how the implementation of the Law would impact the food donation system in the state. DEC developed the Food Donation Working Group to consult with experts in food donation and hunger relief before implementing outreach and developing guidance for the entities that would be required to donate under the Law. DEC is also a member of the New York State Council on Hunger and Food Policy, a council established by the New York State Governor's Office that consists of experts from across the state who work on hunger and food policy.

Webinars

Due to in-person meeting restrictions and to reach a wider audience, including affected businesses, DEC pivoted to a webinar format. DEC hosted eight webinars between 2020 and 2022 to provide updates on the Law, DEC's intended processes to implement the Law, and available resources. Some of these webinars were specifically geared to businesses and institutions, and provided guidance on how to set up a donation program, how to set up a food scraps recycling program, and what they needed to know once the Law took effect on January 1, 2022.

Presentations

DEC presented 28 times at various conferences and association meetings to provide an overview of the Law and any relevant updates leading up to its implementation and through the first year of its implementation. Some examples of these events include presentations to the Food Waste Reduction Alliance, NYS Association of Conservation Committees, Suffolk County Food Policy Committee, Air and Waste Management Association, NYS Food Summit, NYS Organics Summit, NYS Association of Solid Waste Management, ReFED, etc.

Individual Attention to Businesses

DEC met with multiple business associations and individual businesses to address concerns related to the Law.

Website and Listserv

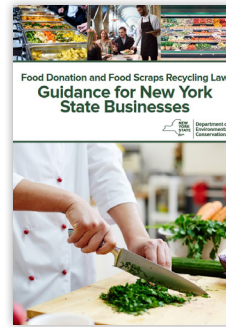

DEC maintains a webpage focused on the Law and a listserv to send important announcements out regarding the Law.

Working Together with State Agencies

DEC worked with the New York State DAM and DOH as it relates to the food donation aspect of the Law. DAM and DOH regulate food service and food retail businesses for food safety, including any food donated. DEC is also a member of the Council on Hunger and Food Policy to provide updates on the Law and to participate in conversations addressing hunger in the state. DEC additionally worked with DAM to clarify the requirements for using food scraps for animal feed and to provide that information to interested parties.

Resources for Businesses and Other Stakeholders

The following resources were developed by DEC to assist stakeholders with the implementation of the Law:

- Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law: Guidance for NYS Businesses;
- List of food scraps transporters;
- List of food scraps recyclers; and
- Guidance documents for food scraps transporters, transfer facilities, landfills, and combustion facilities on how the Law will impact their operations.

P2I, with funding received from DEC, developed the following resources:

- Easy tips for reducing wasted food at home²¹;
- Municipality planning guide fact sheet: food waste management in your community²²;
- Toolkit for building a municipal food waste strategy²³;
- Food waste estimator tool²⁴; and
- Organic resource locator²⁵.

DEC, in partnership with the Harvard Food Law and Policy Clinic and CET, created four legal fact sheets to address common legal questions surrounding food donation and food scraps diversion in New York State. These fact sheets explain both federal and New York State-specific laws and regulations related to:

- Tax incentives for food donation²⁶;
- Liability protections for food donors²⁷;
- Date-labeling requirements for food packaging²⁸;
- Feeding food scraps to animals²⁹;

Conclusion

Approximately 1.9 million New Yorkers are food insecure. There are many ways to help address this circumstance. Maximizing the donation of edible food, especially fruits and vegetables, is one way. While many food establishments, such as grocery stores, have donation programs in place, the Law and the efforts of Feeding NYS with funding from DEC, have had a significant impact on increasing the amount of wasted food captured for donation. Even those food establishments that already were donating have found, with the assistance of Feeding NYS, that they can donate additional items. Feeding NYS has captured an impressive 1.6 million new pounds of food donated in less than one year of this new program. Funding for food collection and distribution resources at the 10 regional food banks will help handle the new and increasing donations and allow them to seek more. DEC's grant program also funded 84 smaller local emergency food relief organizations to help them provide needed services.

For food scraps, the first priority is always to minimize the amount produced. DEC supports, through funding and education materials, practices in homes and at businesses that will reduce waste, such as meal planning, better purchasing management, and waste tracking. For the food scraps that are generated, recycling is a better means of management than disposal. Disposal in a landfill is still the most common destination for food scraps, where it contributes to greenhouse gas emissions through the leakage of methane. Food scraps recycling can be accomplished in several ways, such as animal feed, composting, and anaerobic digestion. The Law helps to drive additional food scraps recycling by requiring it for the larger generators that have a viable option available locally.

DEC provides significant funding to municipalities in New York State to support food scraps education and recycling. These funds help municipalities, both large and small, to move forward with efforts to manage their food scraps locally.

DEC provides critical funding for research at both SUNY ESF and Cornell University to explore new, innovative ways to manage food scraps and other organics.

Partnerships, as well as outreach and education, are crucial when striving to change behavior in waste management. DEC has partnered with Feeding NYS, CET, and P2I to provide assistance, and has also provided outreach through multiple methods and outlets.

There is much work yet to be done to end food insecurity and divert organic waste from landfills. DEC remains committed to supporting all current activities through funding, partnerships, outreach, and education to increase food donations and recycle food scraps.

2022 LIST OF DESIGNATED FOOD SCRAP GENERATORS

Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law

The Environmental Conservation Law Section 27-2211(1) requires the Department to publish a list of designated food scrap generators (DFSG), businesses and institutions that generate 2 tons or more of food scraps per week, that are required to comply with the law. A detailed description of the methodology used by DEC to populate this list can be found here:

<https://www.dec.ny.gov/chemical/114499.html>

This list specifies which DFSGs need to comply with the donation requirements or both the donation and recycling requirements under the law. The list is organized into the following sectors:

- Colleges and Universities
- Correctional Facilities and Jails
- Grocery & Specialty Food
- Hospitality
- Restaurants
 - Full Service
 - Limited Service
- Supercenters
- Other Generators
 - Amusement & Theme Parks
 - Casinos & Racetracks
 - Malls
 - Military Bases
 - Sporting Venues
 - Wholesale & Distribution
- Entities Removed

Note: For access to the DFSG list in excel format, sorted by sector and county, please email FoodScrapsLaw@dec.ny.gov.

December 29, 2021 DFSG List Updates

Entities Who Received Waivers

The revised DFSG list notes which entities received a waiver and the waiver justification.

- Justification 1: Generator does not produce 2+ tons of food scraps per week.
- Justification 2: The total cost of solid waste management including organics recycling is at least 10 percent greater than the total cost of disposal without organics recycling.
- Justification 3: No organics recycler(s) with sufficient capacity exist within 25 miles.
- Justification 4: A food scraps transporter is not available.
- Justification 5: Unique circumstances applicable to the generator.

Entities Removed from the DFSG List

A new section, “Businesses & Institutions Removed from 2022 DFSG List” has been added to show entities that have been removed. Based on information provided from the individual business or institution, they have demonstrated that they do not produce 2 tons of wasted food per week or were duplicates.

Additional Recycling Requirements

Three additional organics recycling facilities became available to accept food scraps from DFSGs since the posting of the DFSG list on June 1, 2021. The addition of these facilities added the recycling requirement to a number of entities, which have been noted with an “x*” symbol in the required to recycle column.

New York State Department of Environmental Conservation
Division of Materials Management

2023 LIST OF DESIGNATED FOOD SCRAP GENERATORS

Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law

The Environmental Conservation Law Section 27-2211(1) requires the Department to publish a list of designated food scrap generators (DFSG), businesses and institutions that generate 2 tons or more of food scraps per week, that are required to comply with the law. A detailed description of the methodology used by DEC to populate this list can be found here:

<https://www.dec.ny.gov/chemical/114499.html>

This list specifies which DFSGs need to comply with the donation requirements or both the donation and recycling requirements under the law from January 1, 2023 – December 31, 2023. The list is organized into the following sectors:

- Colleges and Universities
- Correctional Facilities and Jails
- Grocery & Specialty Food
- Hospitality
- Full Service Restaurants
- Supercenters
- Other Generators
 - Amusement & Theme Parks
 - Casinos & Racetracks
 - Malls
 - Military Bases
 - Sporting Venues
 - Wholesale & Distribution
- Entities Removed

Note: For access to the DFSG list in excel format, sorted by sector and county, please email FoodScrapsLaw@dec.ny.gov.

January 2, 2023 DFSG List Updates

1,146 business and institutions have been identified as designated food scraps generators for 2023. All are required to donate to the maximum extent practicable and 417 are required to recycle food scraps.

Entities Who Received Waivers

The revised DFSG list notes which entities received a waiver for 2023 and the waiver justification. Four businesses received waivers for 2023 under justification two.

- Justification 1: Generator does not produce 2+ tons of food scraps per week.
- Justification 2: The total cost of solid waste management including organics recycling is at least 10 percent greater than the total cost of disposal without organics recycling.
- Justification 3: No organics recycler(s) with sufficient capacity exist within 25 miles.
- Justification 4: A food scraps transporter is not available.
- Justification 5: Unique circumstances applicable to the generator.

New Businesses Added to 2023 DFSG List

Compared to the DFSG list for 2022, the 2023 DFSG list includes 210 additional businesses or institutions as designated food scraps generators subject to the requirements of the law. These entities are marked with an " * " next to their assigned DFSG number.

Entities Removed from the DFSG List

A new section, "Businesses & Institutions Removed from 2023 DFSG List" has been added to show entities that have been removed. Based on information provided from the individual business or institution, they have demonstrated that they do not produce 2 tons of wasted food per week or were duplicates.

NYS FOOD DONATION AND FOOD SCRAPS RECYCLING LAW

LEGISLATIVE GUIDANCE

Approximately 40% of the food produced in the United States goes uneaten. Meanwhile an estimated 2.8 million New Yorkers are food insecure. Simultaneously, excess edible food and food scraps see the end of their life at a landfill, where their decomposition produces methane, a potent greenhouse gas. NYS has taken a stand to make the most of our food by mandating large generators of food scraps to redirect wholesome edible food to those in need and food scraps to organics recycling facilities where they will be recycled into a product beneficial to our environment.

WHEN IS IT EFFECTIVE?

January 1, 2022

WHO WILL THIS IMPACT?

Large generators of food scraps (more than 2 tons of wasted food and food scraps per week on average)

Examples: Restaurants, grocery stores, hotels & motels, colleges & universities, malls, event centers, etc

WHAT ARE THE REQUIREMENTS?

Large generators of food scraps must:

- Separate and donate edible food
- Separate and recycle all remaining food scraps if within 25 miles of an organics recycler

WHO IS EXCLUDED?

- Hospitals, nursing homes, adult care facilities, K-12 schools
- Food scraps generators located in a city with a population of one million or more which has a local law, ordinance or regulation in place which requires the diversion of edible food and food scraps from disposal. Read more on NYC organics diversion legislation: <https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/dsny/site/services/food-scraps-and-yard-waste-page/commercial-requirements>
- Large generators of food scraps may petition the Department for a one-year waiver due to undue hardship

About This Document

Approximately 40% of the food produced in the United States goes uneaten while an estimated 2.2 million New Yorkers are food insecure. Simultaneously, excess edible food and food scraps end up at a landfill, where their decomposition produces methane, a potent greenhouse gas.

Under New York State's Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law, effective January 1, 2022, businesses and institutions that generate an annual average of two or more tons of food scraps per week must:

- Donate excess edible food, and
- Recycle all remaining food scraps if they are within 25 miles of an organics recycler with excess capacity.

*Capacity is defined as the amount of food scraps that an organics recycler is able to receive based on available space, permitting limitations, and the facility's desire and ability to manage the waste.

Food insecurity is experienced by 2.2 million people in New York.

This document outlines best practices and resources for designated food scraps generators (DFSGs) to use when developing their organics management programs and maintaining compliance under the law. This document serves as a starting point, and you can find further information at the additional resources linked in each section, or by emailing FoodScrapsLaw@dec.ny.gov. Visit DEC's website for guidance documents for solid waste management facilities and transporters.

The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation's (DEC) Organics Reduction and Recycling Section (ORRS) provides regulatory oversight, education, and outreach for organics reduction and recycling in New York State. The ORRS is focused on substantially reducing the amount of edible food wasted and increasing organics recycling in the state by outreach, education, and implementing scientifically based regulations.

Food Waste Reduction

While not required under the law, reducing wasted food holds numerous benefits for businesses and the environment. This section helps businesses to understand common sources of food waste and recognize the impacts on their business, and serves as a starting point to quantify and reduce this waste. Implementing a food waste prevention program can save resources, labor, purchasing expenses, and waste-hauling costs.

Food Donation

This section discusses the connection between wholesome, edible food that is thrown away and the 2.2 million New Yorkers who are food insecure. Donating uneaten, wholesome food to local food relief organizations can help serve those in need and reduce the amount of waste produced by businesses. There are numerous resources and tools available to businesses wishing to donate. This section outlines these tools and answers common questions about donation, including liability, tax benefits, food safety, and best practices for implementing an effective and safe donation program.

Food Scraps Recycling

After a business has donated their edible food to the maximum extent practicable, the material remaining still has valuable organic matter and nutrients, and those materials can be recycled into products that benefit our soils. Additionally, excess food that may not meet the standards for human consumption through donation may be diverted for animal feed. This section outlines steps to implementing a food scraps recycling program, including assessing existing waste practices, separating and storing food waste, and transporting and recycling these materials.

FOOD WASTE REDUCTION

RESTAURANTS

Restaurants and food service businesses generate 25.4 billion pounds of surplus food each year.*

GROCERY

Grocery retailers generate 21 billion pounds of surplus food (produce) each year.

INSTITUTIONS

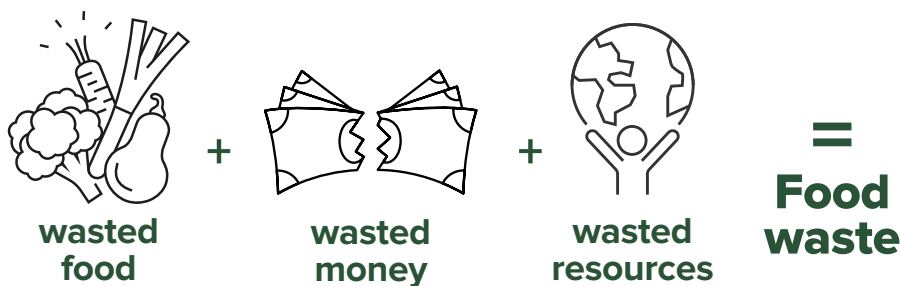

Institutions and other businesses such as hotels, universities, and other establishments with cafeterias, generate an additional 7 to 11 billion pounds every year.†

Across the United States, food waste in the food retail and service industries adds up to about $218 billion, and this financial loss can be felt by businesses throughout the country. For example, when food is placed in your trash bins, your business has already paid for it in a few different ways: when it was purchased, labor costs for preparation, storage costs, and waste hauling costs. Essentially, reducing food loss and waste (also referred to as food waste or wasted food) is good for business.

The Business Case for Reducing Food Waste

Benefits:

- Save money – Sell more of your purchased food, reduce disposal costs, and make your operations more efficient.
- Increase brand value – Attract customers and clients by advertising the steps you've taken to reduce food waste.
- Reduce climate impacts and environmental footprint – Reducing food loss and waste conserves the resources and energy used to grow and transport them, and prevents them from being wasted, too. Wasted food and food scraps also generate methane, a potent greenhouse gas, when they are thrown away in landfills.

Although the New York State Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling law does not require DFSGs to reduce food waste generation, there are many good reasons to start a waste reduction program or improve an existing one. Developing a plan to reduce food waste at your business or institution can save you money, reduce your carbon footprint, and reduce the amount of food scraps that you must recycle or dispose of. This section of the guide is not prescriptive; use it as a starting point to help determine the steps you can take to reduce food waste. You will find resources linked throughout this guide to help you get started.

DEVELOPING A FOOD WASTE REDUCTION PROGRAM

Professionals in the food service and retail industries are already experts in preventing food waste. The tips below can help you design, implement, and sustain a food waste reduction program that will fit seamlessly into your business operations. Even if you have a program in place, it may be a good time to reassess your program and look for ways to improve.

Engage your staff

One of the most important first steps in developing a food waste reduction program is engaging staff and seeking their input. Make sure to include kitchen staff, too, as involving the staff members that directly handle the food is key to a successful food waste reduction program.

Buy-in from staff at all levels of your business is important and will ensure that your program is supported and sustainable.

Quantify your food waste

To quantify your waste, try conducting a waste audit or using a tool such as the NYSP21's Food Waste Estimator Tool. There are many strategies you can take to measure food loss and waste.

Evaluate and determine the root causes of your food waste

Once you've determined approximately how much of your waste stream is comprised of wasted food and food scraps, you can start to consider where the waste is coming from and if it's preventable.

Questions to ask:

1. Where is the waste coming from? Is there a particular point in your operations where more food is being wasted?
2. Are there any menu items that customers aren't receptive to? Are portion sizes for some menu items too large?
3. Are there certain times or days of the week that more food is being wasted?

Set your goals

Use the information gained from the waste quantification and evaluation process to set your goals for food waste reduction.

Communicate with staff

- Work with your staff to identify different preparation methods, storage techniques, new recipes, etc., they could use to reduce food waste.
- Develop and conduct any necessary training. Encourage staff at all levels to participate and share their ideas.

Monitor your program

Keep track of your progress and make adjustments where necessary.

Tracking Inventory and Food Waste

Consider improving your current methods of tracking inventory. Some management tools available to businesses to help track inventory and measure food waste include Leanpath, Phood, and Winnow.

Food Waste Reduction Tips

There are many opportunities to reduce food waste in the kitchen, in dining areas, and on the store floor. Some best management practices include:

RESTAURANTS/FOOD SERVICE:

- Track preparation and best-by dates, and store food using the “first-in, first-out” technique to reduce spoilage.
- Move away from batch preparation if you find that you are wasting significant amounts of batch-prepared food. Consider cook-to-order preparation, if possible.
- Offer varying portion sizes.
- Ask customers if they want sides or complimentary items such as bread and chips before providing them.
- Use innovative techniques that repurpose leftover food or use non-traditional parts of food (e.g., root-to-stem cooking).
Advertise these dishes to your customers to increase your brand value with environmentally conscious customers.

Nearly three-quarters of the total surplus comes from plate waste (customers not eating what they’ve been served).

GROCERY STORES/FOOD RETAIL

- Reduce overstock by finding new ways to display food. Consider displaying produce in smaller containers so the display can appear fuller without overstocking.
- Offer discounts on imperfect produce or food items that are close to the “sell-by” or “use-by” date. Follow all applicable food safety requirements and add additional signage to educate customers on how to read date labels.

FOOD DONATION

The Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) estimates that up to 40% of food in the United States goes uneaten, and excess edible food ends up being thrown out in landfills by restaurants, grocery stores, and institutional food service providers every day. This represents a lost opportunity for approximately 2.2 million New Yorkers who are food insecure. Donating uneaten, wholesome food to local food relief organizations can help serve those in need and reduce the amount of waste produced by your business.

Under the New York State Food Donation and Food Scraps Law, all designated food scraps generators are required to donate their excess edible food to the maximum extent practicable.

Maximum extent practicable means the degree to which the maximum amount of edible food can be donated for human consumption without jeopardizing human health and the environment, by implementing best management practices and taking into account cost-effectiveness and feasibility.

Feeding New York State is available to connect businesses with donation organizations and answer questions on food donation best practices.

Donation Information Hotline: 1-518-930-7000

Liability Protection

The federal Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Food Donation Act, as well as New York's Good Samaritan Law, provide strong liability protection for businesses that donate food in good faith and do not act with gross negligence.

Tax Savings

In addition to helping hungry New Yorkers, businesses can claim general or enhanced federal tax deductions for food donation to a 501(c)(3) not-for-profit. You can find more information on these tax opportunities on our Tax Incentives Legal Fact Sheet. You should also contact your tax professional to determine applicability.

HOW TO DONATE FOOD SAFELY

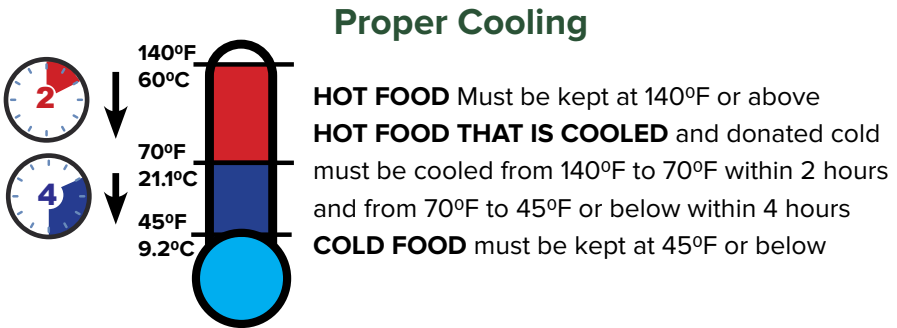

When setting up a food donation program, you must discuss what can be donated and the logistics of the process with the food relief organization, and establish procedures that protect the safety of donated foods. In general, businesses can donate packaged, shelf-stable, perishable, non-perishable, and prepared foods that have not been served. This includes raw or properly cooked, processed, and prepared edible foods as long as they have not been served. Foods may not be donated if they are not suitable for use in your establishment because they have been improperly prepared. In New York State, food safety requirements for food service establishments can be found in 10 NYCRR Part 14.

Donating Prepared Foods

Donating prepared or other similar highly perishable foods can be done safely. (Examples of foods in this category include milk products, eggs, meat, poultry, fish, shellfish, edible crustacea, cooked potato, and cooked rice.) Review the food safety regulations pertaining to your establishment, but in general, the following time and temperature requirements must be met:

Best practice: Keep hot food hot (above 140°F) until the decision is made to donate, and then cooled according to the time and temperature rules as outlined above. This way, the donor has complete control of the process until the food is delivered to the recipient.

If food is unable to meet these time and temperature requirements, or is contaminated at any time, it must be recycled as food scraps (see: Food Scraps Recycling section of this document) or disposed of in the trash.

Best Practices for Donating Prepared Foods

Communicating with your partner food relief organization is key to safely and efficiently donate prepared foods. Some tips:

- Some organizations, such as food pantries that only offer shelf-stable food items or food banks that move food at greater quantities, may not accept prepared foods. Look for an organization like a shelter, soup kitchen, or other service agency that serves hot meals in your area and ask if they accept prepared foods.
- It may be helpful to indicate the approximate number of servings in containers of prepared foods like pasta, soup, etc., that aren't stored in individual serving size containers.

However, please note that many organizations prefer prepared foods to be donated in individually sealed packaging. Communicate with your partner organization to determine how to proceed.

- Some organizations may only accept a minimum number of servings per food item. Identify which partner organizations in your area are best suited to receiving large, medium, and small amounts of prepared food to make the donation process more efficient.

Served Food

Food that has been served (offered without protection from the consumer, such as on a plate or display where the consumer has uncontrolled access to the food) may NOT be donated. (Note: Foods on protected buffet lines (i.e., sneezeguards installed, proper utensils available, temperature-controlled, etc.) are not considered served and can be donated.) Be sure to adhere to all time and temperature requirements.

LABELING, STORING, AND TRANSPORTING FOOD FOR DONATION

Food for donation must be stored following existing federal and New York food safety regulations.

Best Practices

- Store food for donation separately;
- Label each container of food for donation clearly with description of the item, date and time it was saved, and name of receiving entity
 - List any allergens;
 - For prepared and potentially hazardous foods, keep a log to show that proper time and temperature have been maintained;
 - If transporting food to more than one receiving entity, keep the donations separate for ease of handling and delivery;
- Use insulated containers as appropriate to transport cold or frozen foods and maintain proper temperatures
 - Keep hot foods hot and cold foods cold, and keep them separated while transporting;
- Use tightly sealed containers to prevent leakage and cross-contamination; and
- Develop concise Standard Operating Procedures (SOP) and train staff on your donation program
 - Display signage and create step-by-step instructions.

FINDING FOOD RELIEF ORGANIZATION PARTNERS

Feeding New York State and its member food banks work to end hunger through partnerships with food relief organizations across the state. It is important to get familiar and develop relationships with your local food bank or food relief organizations early in your program development. There are many groups across the state that accept and distribute food to those in need. Contact your local food bank which can assist you in finding a local partner or talk to other businesses in your area that already have established programs.

There are also resources online for locating food relief organizations. Different web platforms and apps can provide innovative solutions, connecting donors with the organizations that need food donations the most. These digital tools are available to build connections and move food through existing channels in a cost-effective manner.

But if you are looking to benefit from liability protections and tax deduction capabilities, you need to work with a 501(c)3 not-for-profit organization.

Communication Is Key

Remember to share your donation program standard operating procedures with your food relief partners so everyone agrees. Open communication establishes trust, saves time, and eliminates confusion. Consider having a written agreement with partners that clearly establishes handling, storage, transportation, and acceptance procedures.

Which Food Relief Organization Type Is Right for Me?

Food banks, pantries, and soup kitchens do not all operate the same way. Some organizations do not accept prepared foods but may assist with finding another organization within their region or network to partner with. Different organizations may also serve different types of clients and have varying capabilities to pick up donated food or provide other logistical services. You may need to partner with more than one organization to donate your surplus, wholesome food effectively (e.g., one that can receive shelf-stable packaged food weekly and another that can accept and pick up your prepared meals twice a week).

FOOD SCRAPS RECYCLING

Food scraps are readily biodegradable and contain organic matter and nutrients, which make them a valuable resource rather than a waste product. Recycling these materials (through composting, anaerobic digestion, etc.) creates useful products that benefit our soils.

Under the New York State Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law, designated food scraps generators located within 25 miles of an organics recycler with excess capacity are required to:

- Separate food scraps from other solid wastes;
- Properly store food scraps;
- Educate staff on their food scraps diversion program; and
- Divert their food scraps from disposal (obtain a transporter, self-haul food scraps to an organics recycler, or recycle on-site).

PLANNING A FOOD SCRAPS RECYCLING PROGRAM

There are three main items to consider while planning your own food scraps recycling program:

- Assessing existing practices;
- Separating and storing; and
- Transporting and recycling.

Assessing Existing Practices

Consider your existing solid waste and recycling management program. Collect as much information as you can, including transportation costs, existing contract agreements, and total quantities of waste generated. Look at the types and quantities of organic materials that your establishment generates. Which of these materials can be easily diverted? NYSP21 has developed self-assessment tools and guides to understand both the quantity and causes of food waste generation for the following industries:

- Grocery
- Food Service
- Healthcare

Separating and Storing

Pre-consumer Scraps

Typically, the easiest food scraps to divert from disposal are pre-consumer kitchen scraps.

Back-of-the-house prep wastes are usually clean (little to no contamination from plastics, consumer products, packaging, etc.) and consistent in type and quantity. Therefore, these wastes have the potential to be more predictable and easier to manage when designing a recycling program. This is where most designated food scrap generators will get the biggest “bang for their buck,” and more recyclers easily accept this material stream.

Pre-consumer food scraps should be separated from other solid wastes into dedicated collection containers in the kitchen or food prep area (many existing programs use 5-gallon lidded buckets) before being transferred to a larger dumpster or totes (depending on your transporter or method of recycling).

Post-consumer Scraps

Post-consumer and front-of-the-house wastes include plate scrapings, public-facing collection containers, food collected at events, and food that has already been consumed in part by the customer. This is often where higher contamination rates occur. Non-organic materials such as straws, stirrers, cutlery, creamer packets, film plastics, drink containers, and packaging can easily get mixed into the organics collection container. It is best to communicate with your transporter and/or organics recycler about accepting post-consumer scraps, as facilities have different thresholds for the amount of contamination they can manage.

Eliminating Contamination with Biodegradable Service Ware

Different options exist for compostable or biodegradable cutlery, dishes, cups, straws, containers, etc. Talk to your transporter or organics recycling facility first to ensure they can accept these materials. (Some facilities may look for BPI-certified compostable materials, for example.)

Public Signage

Education and signage for public-facing collection containers are critical to a successful diversion program. Clear, accessible, and easy to understand outreach to the consumers will decrease contamination. Utilize free web resources to generate customizable signs for your business (e.g., StopWaste.org).

Health and Safety

Communicate with your local health department to ensure your separation and storage plans meet food safety requirements. Food scraps should be managed and removed as often as necessary to keep the kitchen area sanitary and prevent odors and pests. Outdoor dumpsters and storage containers should also be designed and maintained to meet local health regulations.

Avoid the Yuck Factor

Talk to your transporter about using compostable liners in your collection containers to help keep them clean.

Some transporters also provide a service to rinse or replace the containers after transferring the organics into their vehicle.

Storage Tip

If available, store food scraps containers in large refrigeration units to reduce potential odors.

Transporting

Communication Is Key

Your existing solid waste transporter may offer additional services for food scraps pickup or may be able to work with you on reducing waste-hauling fees by reducing pickup frequency or container size. Design your storage plan with your transporter in mind; they may require you to use special containers or to place the material in a particular location for pickup.

DEC maintains a list of available food scraps transporters by county.

Note: To maintain compliance under the law, food scraps must be transported to an organics recycling facility (to locate organics recycling facilities, visit the Organics Resource Locator map) or to a destination for beneficial use (e.g., animal feed), and NOT sent for disposal.

Pickup Frequency

Food scraps should be collected at a frequency that minimizes odors and vector (pest) attraction. This can vary depending on the types and quantity of materials collected as well as the season (warmer months may require more frequent pickups).

Self-Hauling

You may choose to self-haul your food scraps to an organics recycling facility (visit the Organics Resource Locator map) instead of obtaining a transporter. Be sure to communicate with the receiving facility to ensure they can accept the types and quantity of organics that you anticipate bringing there.

Recycling Methods

Designated food scraps generators are not limited to any specific facility or method of recycling under the Law. However, the recycling method chosen should be appropriate for the type, quantity, and contamination level of the waste generated.

Visit DEC's website to learn about the different recycling technologies that exist in New York State for food scraps. Acceptable options include, but are not limited to:

- Composting;
- Anaerobic digestion;
- Animal feed in accordance with applicable Dept. of Agriculture and Markets rules (AGM Article 5 Section 72-a); and
- Land application.

On-Site Recycling

Businesses may choose to recycle their food scraps on-site through composting or another method. Composting material at the site of generation is exempt under DEC's solid waste regulations (6 NYCRR Part 361). Businesses looking to recycle food scraps on-site must still meet all local health regulations. For more information and technical assistance with recycling on-site, please contact DEC's Organics Reduction and Recycling Section: organicrecycling@dec.ny.gov.

NYSP2I developed an in-depth Q&A Guide for New York State Businesses, Municipalities, and Communities, which details different on-site treatment systems and methodologies, along with their pros and cons.

Staff Training

The staff are an important piece of the food scraps diversion plan. To see success, you must maintain cooperation and understanding. Clear communication and signage (translated into other languages as appropriate) should be built into your staff training program.

Staff should be offered periodic refresher trainings to reinforce what was learned and to compensate for any turnover.

Let your employees know the benefits of the work they are doing. Whether those impacts are environmental, financial, or just to maintain compliance, your staff will be a big part of your program's sustained success.

Communication Is Key

The best feedback will come from your employees who manage these materials day-in and day-out, so schedule some time to hear from them.

Reassess and Adjust

Monitor and assess your food scraps diversion program. Regularly inspect and document instances of contamination in the organics and waste collection containers and relay your findings to staff. Consider necessary adjustments to collection container sizes, transportation pick-up frequency, public or staff-facing signage, etc. Continue to communicate with your transporter, recycler, and staff to keep your program running smoothly.

With the information and resources provided in this guidance document, you are now ready to design a safe and successful organics management program for your business.

NYS Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law

Guidance for Food Scraps Transporters

OVERVIEW OF NYS FOOD DONATION & FOOD SCRAPS RECYCLING LAW

Beginning January 1, 2022 the New York State Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law requires designated food scraps generators to donate edible food and recycle food scraps if a organics recycler exists within 25 miles. A designated food scraps generator (DFSG) produces at least 2 tons of food scraps per week. The Law also contains requirements for food scraps transporters, transfer facilities and other intermediaries, combustion facilities, and landfills.

EXAMPLES OF DESIGNATED FOOD SCRAPS GENERATORS (DFSG)

DFSG include, but are not limited to:

- Grocery Stores
- Restaurants
- Colleges
- Hotels
- Sport Arenas
- Venue Centers
- Etc.

This law does not include businesses within New York City (local law 146 already in place), hospitals, nursing homes, adult care facilities and K-12 schools.

HOW TO IDENTIFY A DFSG IN YOUR SERVICE AREA

DEC will publish a list of DFSGs by June 1, 2021 and will be available on the DEC website.

TRANSPORTER RESPONSIBILITIES UNDER THE LAW

If you are a transporter that collects food scraps from a DFSG (that does not have a waiver), you must deliver the food scraps to an organics recycler (composting facility, anaerobic digester, etc.) or to a transfer facility or other intermediary that will transfer the food scraps to a recycler. The food scraps must not be delivered to a landfill or to a combustion facility. The designated food scraps generator is responsible for properly separating their organics.

WHERE TO TRANSPORT FOOD SCRAPS

DEC will publish a list of organics recyclers across the state that are interested in accepting food scraps from designated food scraps generators. This list will be published on the DEC website.

If there is an organics recycler within 25 miles of a designated food scraps generator, the law requires that the food scraps must be recycled, but not that they have to be recycled at an organics recycling facility within 25 miles.

NYS Food Donation and Food Scraps Recycling Law

Guidance for Food Scraps Transporters

SERVICING MALLS, PLAZAS OR COLLEGE CAMPUSES WITH MULTIPLE FOOD SERVICE BUSINESSES

If a number of small food service providers at the same location are served by one transporter and they generate 2 tons of food scraps per week or more together, they will be considered a DFSG and their food scraps must be separated and recycled. The entity or entities responsible for contracting solid waste hauling services will also be responsible for arranging organics hauling services. These DFSG will be identified on the list published by DEC.

WORKING WITH NON-DFSGS (CAFES, K-12 SCHOOLS, HOSPITALS, ETC)

We encourage you to partner with businesses of any size to recycle their food scraps.

BENEFITS TO THE TRANSPORTER COMMUNITY

This law intends to benefit the organics recycling industry as a whole by creating new opportunities for recycling organic materials. Specifically for transporters, this creates potential business opportunities as generators will be required to utilize food scraps transporters to meet the requirements of the law.

TRANSFER FACILITY RESPONSIBILITIES UNDER THE LAW

Transfer facilities that accept separated food scraps from a DFSG (that does not have a waiver) must transfer the food scraps to an organics recycler (composting facility, anaerobic digester, etc.). The food scraps cannot be transferred to a landfill or a combustion facility and must not be co-mingled with other solid waste while at the transfer facility.

Transfer facilities are not responsible for separating food scraps that are co-mingled with garbage or recyclables.

BENEFITS TO THE MATERIALS MANAGEMENT COMMUNITY

This law intends to benefit the organics recycling industry as a whole by creating new opportunities for recycling organic materials. Specifically for transfer facilities, this creates potential business opportunities to initiate or expand food scraps recycling efforts co-located at transfer facilities, or further develop partnerships with organics recycling facilities.

Legal Fact Sheet

New York Food Donation: Liability Protections

Created by the Harvard Food Law and Policy Clinic, September 2018

Federal and state laws provide strong liability protections for businesses (including farms) and nonprofits that provide or receive donated food. The federal Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Food Donation Act provides liability protection for food donors and recipients, and New York's Good Samaritan law provides additional liability protection to businesses in the state.

The Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Act

The Bill Emerson Good Samaritan Food Donation Act (the Emerson Act) provides a federal baseline of protection for food donors.¹ The Emerson Act covers individuals, businesses, non-profit organizations, and the officers of businesses and non-profit organizations. It also covers gleaners—individuals that harvest donated agricultural crops to give to a nonprofit organization that distributes to the needy.² These individuals and businesses are protected so long as they donate qualifying types of food in good faith.

- Qualifying Food: The donated food must be “apparently wholesome” or an “apparently fit grocery product” and meet “all quality and labeling standards imposed by Federal, State, and local laws and regulations,” even if it is not “readily marketable due to appearance, age, freshness, grade, size, surplus, or other conditions.”³
- Exception for Reconditioned Food: Even if a food does not meet all applicable standards, the donor can still be protected by the Emerson Act as long as (s)he follows all of the Act's reconditioning procedures,⁴ which include:
 - 1) The donor informs the nonprofit of the nonconforming nature of the product;
 - 2) The nonprofit agrees to recondition the item so that it is compliant; and
 - 3) The nonprofit knows the standards for reconditioning the item.⁵

The Emerson Act protects most but not all donations of qualifying food. In order to get protection, the donation must be structured such that:

- 1) The donor donates to a non-profit organization.⁶
- 2) This nonprofit organization that receives the donated food distributes it to needy populations.⁷ Direct donations from the donor to needy individuals are not explicitly protected by the Act.⁸
- 3) The ultimate recipients do not pay for this donated food.⁹ However, if one nonprofit donates food to another nonprofit for distribution, the Act allows the first nonprofit to charge the distributing nonprofit a nominal fee to cover handling and processing costs.¹⁰

So long as these criteria are met, the Emerson Act is quite protective of donors, and does not hold a donor liable unless the donor acts with gross negligence or intentional misconduct.¹¹

- Gross Negligence involves “voluntary and conscious conduct (including a failure to act)” by a person or organization that knew when the donation was made that the donated food was likely to have harmful health impacts.¹²
- Intentional Misconduct is when a person or organization donates “with knowledge . . . that the conduct is harmful to the health or well-being of another person.”¹³

In other words, one should not donate or facilitate the distribution of donated food that one knows is likely to be harmful or dangerous. Unfortunately, the Act gives little guidance on what activities qualify as gross negligence or intentional misconduct. However, the House of Representatives Report associated with the Emerson Act has indicated that each case must be analyzed individually, and that, for example, donating food past the sell-by date generally will not impact liability protections because such labeling is not federally required and generally does not correspond to food safety.¹⁴ The lack of court cases interpreting the

Emerson Act suggests how protective the Act is of donors; research does not turn up a single case related to food donation liability.¹⁵

Liability Protection for Food Donation in New York

In addition to the Emerson Act, New York state law is relevant to liability protection for food donations in several ways.

- The Emerson Act: The Emerson Act indicates that donated food must meet all applicable state and local food quality and labeling standards in addition to federal requirements.¹⁶ This means that state laws regarding food labeling and safety must be followed for a food donor to receive protection under the federal Emerson Act.
- State Authority: States are free to enact laws that are the same or more protective of donors than the federal Emerson Act, which sets a floor on liability protection.¹⁷ New York has passed such legislation.

New York law provides protection from civil and criminal liability to good-faith donors who donate any canned or perishable food, farm product, game or wild game to a charitable or nonprofit organization for free distribution.¹⁸ Good-faith donors include, but are not limited to, public food service establishments, meaning places where food is prepared, sold, or served for immediate consumption; ordered or taken out by customers; or prepared for delivery and consumption elsewhere.¹⁹ The donor must inspect the food at the time of donation and find that it is apparently fit for human consumption.²⁰ Foods may be fit for human consumption even if not readily marketable due to appearance, freshness, grade, surplus, or other conditions.²¹

New York state law does not provide liability protection when the donor has actual or constructive knowledge that the donated food is adulterated, tainted, contaminated or harmful to health.²²

Conclusion

Federal law and New York state law provide ample liability protections for food donors and nonprofit recipients. The fact that research does not turn up any cases related to liability for food donation demonstrates the strength of liability protections under the Emerson Act. Liability protections for food donors and nonprofit recipients exist so long as the donated food is in compliance with federal and state safety and labeling rules, and it is donated to a nonprofit organization in good faith and without the donor acting with gross negligence or intentional misconduct.

² Id. §1791(b)(5).

³ There is an exception for mislabeled food products that are “not readily marketable,” which can also be protected so long as the donor explains the mislabeling to the donee, and the donee has sufficient knowledge to and does recondition the product to meet applicable standards. Id.

⁶ The Act defines a non-profit as an incorporated or unincorporated entity that satisfies these requirements: (1) operates “for religious, charitable, or educational purposes” and (2) “does not provide net earnings to, or operate in any other manner for the benefit of any officer, employee, or shareholder.” 42 U.S.C.A. §1791(b)(9) (West 2018).

²¹ Id. Like the federal Emerson Act, the New York state liability protection law does not explicitly state that past-date food donations will be protected from liability, although as noted above, date labeling generally does not correspond to food safety and past-date food is generally safe for human consumption, so past-date donated food likely would receive liability protection.

Legal Fact Sheet

New York Food Donation: Tax Incentives

Created by the Harvard Law School Food Law and Policy Clinic, September 2018

Federal tax incentives provide important financial incentives that make food donation more cost-effective and economically beneficial. These tax incentives have been extraordinarily successful in motivating food donation. In the past, federal tax incentives for food donations were limited to C- corporations.¹ After the incentives were temporarily expanded to cover more businesses in 2005, food donations across the country rose by 137% in 2006.² Following a series of temporary extensions, Congress subsequently made the expansion permanent in 2015,³ providing all businesses with added incentive to increase food donations and prevent food waste. At the federal level, tax incentives are available in the form of general or enhanced deductions, each of which are discussed in this fact sheet.

In addition to the federal tax incentives, some states have enacted state-level tax incentives as well. As of January 2018, New York State provides a state-level tax incentive in the form of a tax credit for farmers that donate food. Some New York farmers are therefore eligible for both federal and state-level tax incentives.⁴

Federal Tax Incentives

How are the tax incentives calculated?

General (non-enhanced) tax deduction: Businesses that donate inventory may claim a tax deduction in the amount of the property's basis,⁵ which is usually the value of the property's cost to the business, and is often lower than the fair market value (the value at which goods can be sold). Businesses other than C-corporations—including S-corporations,⁶ sole proprietorships,⁷ and some LLCs⁸—cannot deduct more than either 30% or 50% of the business' total taxable income each year, depending on the type of organization to which the business is donating.⁹ C-corporations generally cannot deduct more than 10% of their taxable income each year.¹⁰

Enhanced tax deduction: The enhanced tax deduction provides an extra incentive for donation by allowing the donating business to deduct the lesser of (a) twice the basis value of the donated food or (b) the basis value of the donated food plus one-half of the food's expected profit margin (if the food were to be sold at fair market value).¹¹ Under the enhanced deduction, all businesses may deduct up to 15% of their taxable income for food donations.¹²

Example: A grocery store donates potatoes with a fair market value of $100. The basis value of these potatoes was $30. The expected profit margin is the fair market value minus the basis value ($100 - $30), which is $70. Under the enhanced deduction, the grocery store is eligible to deduct the smaller of:

(a) Basis Value x 2 = $30 x 2 = $60, or (b) Basis Value + (expected profit margin / 2) = $30 + ($70 / 2) = $65

The enhanced deduction would be $60, which is substantially higher than the general deduction (the $30 basis value).

Businesses that do not account for inventories and are not required to capitalize indirect costs¹³ will have the option to calculate the basis value at 25% of the products' fair market value.¹⁴ Businesses also have the option to calculate the fair market value of certain products—i.e., those that cannot be sold because of failure to meet internal standards, lack of a market, or similar reasons—by using the price of the same or substantially similar, saleable food items.¹⁵

How can a donating business know if they are eligible for a tax deduction?

General tax deduction requirements: In order for a charitable contribution to qualify for a federal tax deduction, the donation must be used for charitable purposes and given to a qualified organization as laid out under section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code (IRC).¹⁶

Enhanced tax deduction requirements: In order to qualify for the enhanced tax deduction, a business must donate to a recipient organization that meets several criteria. First, the recipient must be a qualified 501(c)(3) not-for-profit as defined by the IRC.¹⁷ Additionally, the donor and recipient must meet the following requirements:¹⁸

(A) The recipient must use the donated food in a manner consistent with the purpose constituting that organization's exempt status under IRC 501(c)(3), which means that the donated food must be used exclusively for charitable purposes;

(B) The food must be used for the care of the ill, needy, or infants;

(C) The food may not be transferred by the recipient organization in exchange for money, other property, or services; however, the recipient organization may charge another organization a nominal amount for "administrative, warehousing, or other similar costs."¹⁹

Example: If a business donates food to a food bank (the recipient organization), the food bank may not charge a soup kitchen for the donated food, and the soup kitchen may not charge the individuals eating at the soup kitchen. The food bank can, however, charge the soup kitchen a nominal fee for reimbursement of the costs of storing the food in a warehouse;²⁰

(D) The donating business must receive a written statement from the recipient organization.²¹ The statement must describe the contributed property and represent that the property will be used in compliance with the requirements outlined above;²² and

(E) The donated property must satisfy the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FDCA) at the time of donation and for the preceding 180 days.²³ For food that did not exist for 180 days prior to donation, this requirement is satisfied if the food was in compliance with the FDCA for the period of its existence and at donation, and any similar property held by the donor during the 180 days prior to donation was also held in compliance with the FDCA.²⁴

The 2018 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act maintains the enhanced tax deduction and does not alter how this deduction is calculated. However, any taxable income remaining after deductions are taken will be subject to the new corporate rate of 21%, rather than the prior corporate rate of 35%.²⁵

State Tax Incentives

Beginning in 2018, New York provides a tax credit to farmers who donate qualifying food to a food pantry, food bank, or other emergency program operating in the state of New York.²⁶ In contrast to a tax deduction, which reduces a taxpayer's taxable income, a tax credit is a direct reduction in the amount of taxes owed.

Farmers can claim a tax credit in the amount of 25% of the fair market value of the food donated, capped at $5,000 per year.²⁷

This material is based upon work supported under a grant by the Rural Utilities Service, United States Department of Agriculture. USDA is an equal opportunity provider, employer and lender.

Example: A farmer donates apples with a fair market value of $1,200 to an eligible food bank. The farmer can claim a tax credit of 25% x $1,200 = $300.

Qualifying foods must be grown or produced in the state of New York. Furthermore, they must be apparently wholesome and meet all quality and labeling standards, even though the food may not be readily marketable due to appearance, age, freshness, grade, size, surplus, or other conditions.²⁸

Farmers are eligible for the tax credit if they are New York resident taxpayers and farming within the state is their primary source of income.²⁹ In order to receive the credit, farmers must present a receipt, letter, or other communication from the eligible donation site showing: the name of the pantry, the date and location of the donation, and a reasonably detailed description of the donation.³⁰

Eligible donation sites are food banks, food pantries, or other emergency programs operating in New York State that qualify as IRC § 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organizations.³¹ Farmers can also make donations to eligible sites through a third party entity, such as a nonprofit food aggregator or agricultural cooperative, so long as the third party is also a tax-exempt organization that can provide the eligible farmer with a receipt for the donation.³²

Conclusion

In sum, businesses in the state of New York may claim the general or enhanced federal tax deductions for food donations. Furthermore, eligible farmers in the state of New York may also claim a state tax credit.

²⁷ NY CLS TAX §210-B(52)(a). Fair market value is determined by the standards set forth under section 170(e)(3)(C)(v) of the internal revenue code. NY CLS TAX §210-B(52)(a). Fair market value is determined by taking into account the price at which the same or substantially the same food items (as to both type and quality) are sold by the taxpayer at the time of the contribution (or, if not so sold at such time, in the recent past). The statute specifies that an eligible farmer is a taxpayer whose federal gross income from farming is at least two thirds of excess federal gross income, with excess federal gross income defined as federal gross income above $30,000. NY CLS TAX §210-B(52)(b). The New York Department of Taxation and Finance has interpreted this to refer to farmers whose "income is primarily attributed to farming activity in the State..."
